A REFLECTION

FROM FR. JOHN

Saint Thomas Aquinas, nicknamed the angelic Doctor of the Church, said, "justice is a habit whereby a man renders to each one his due by a constant and perpetual will." At first glance, this seems simple, but looking deeper shows some rich implications for modern life.

A habit is a behavior done so many times, we begin to do it without thinking; the behavior becomes a part of us. What this tells us is that we can't practice justice in different ways to different receivers of justice. Instead, by using justice over and over, justice is engrained in our very thoughts.

Justice is a habit when a person renders to each one, his due. This is where the argument becomes more heated. What does each human person have due to him? At the core of the question is the right to human dignity explained by the U.S. Bishops; "The Catholic Church proclaims that human life is sacred and that the dignity of the human person is the foundation of a moral vision for society."

Human dignity is difficult to quantify. Respect, deference, enough to eat, shelter from the weather, love, mercy, equal rights are just a few ways to envision dignity.

The final part of the definition is that justice is meted out by the donors with a constant and perpetual will. So we can't use it sometimes, but not other times, or with some people, and not with others. Because it has become a habit through repeated use, our will seeks justice in all aspects of our worldliness. Specifically, our dealings with the world, our interaction with charity, and our witness of injustice are all a matter of virtue when Justice is our mode of operation.

Justice is particularly important in a small Church. Equality, mercy, and love (charity) should be our mantra; each supports a just Church. A just Church is filled with persons who practice justice. We desire justice, all deserve justice, and we emulate Christ when we use justice for others.

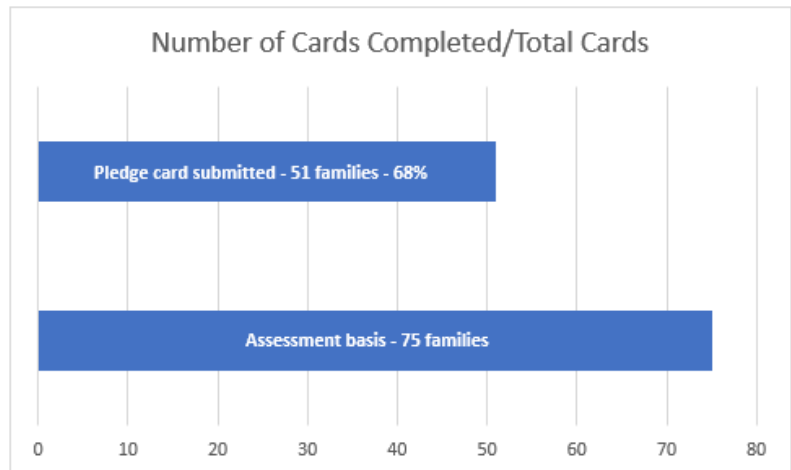

Train up a child in the way he should go; even when he is old, he will not depart from it.

Proverbs 22:6

CCD classes are scheduled to start Sunday, November 1st. Times like these make it ever more important to grow our children's faith since they are the future of the Church. Please register your child soon. A great way to grow one's faith is to share it with others, so please encourage your teen to come and help.
